What's the budget for this year?

I have set the amount people pay locally towards policing and community safety services here since 2013. Over that period, the increase in Staffordshire and Stoke-on-Trent is one of the lowest in the country. Following a change in governance I am also setting, for the first time, what local people pay towards the fire and rescue service. It provides new opportunities for collaboration and sharing some support functions so that more of the available money can be spent in the heart of communities. Finances are tight for both services, but I have been able to keep the amount paid locally towards fire and rescue in line with inflation. Policing, however, is under greater pressure. Efficiencies already made, and new ones identified, are significant but not enough to provide the extra investment needed for policing. The new governance arrangement to include fire and rescue is being met without any increase to the existing budget. However, it is with reluctance I am increasing the amount people pay towards policing here more than I have done before.
